

Hello

I would like to make a comment regarding protecting koala populations on the Far North Coast of NSW. It seems very obvious to me that to protect koalas you have to protect their habitat, and there are many examples of a blatant disregard for this by Forestry Corp and the Roads authorities, as they fudge their way through justifying removing and separating major koala habitats on the Far North Coast.

Several examples spring to mind:

1. Double Duke State Forest
2. Cherry Tree State Forest
3. Pacific Highway south of Ballina (Coolgardie area)
4. Royal State Forest

Perhaps some of the above government authorities would like to claim again that they have had no effect on koala populations. Either they are lying (quite likely) or have their heads in the sand.
