	I think it's wonderful what's being done. My concern would be that a majority of people would not see the economic benefit. The development of protected habitat by increasing National Parks is an excellent initiative, especially if they are staffed and managed effectively. I would love to see more pro activity through local councils and organisations like Planet Ark to promote plantings of koala food sources. However, in the Coffs Harbour area these tallowood trees can grow very big and need to be planted appropriately and in areas where feral dogs and traffic threats are not an issue. Maybe more crown land could be seeded with tallowood on National Tree Day. In other areas, the same idea, but with the identified species of koala food tree for that area. Koala tagging and monitoring may help too.
