

S00015 – Lachlan and Julia King

This is ridiculous! There should not be so many species off licence, especially frogs! frogs are delicate creatures, and should not be kept unlicensed except maybe 2 species, the green tree frog and possibly even red eyed tree frog, but no more! and there is absolutely no good reason to make all those frog species prohibited, we should be able to keep broad palmed frogs, tusked frogs and all the other species you want prohibited! we should not have to keep paper receipts for code species, why the hell would we go back to paper when the ebook is so much quicker and easier! there should be no caps on amounts and no limits on breeding. Species such as the northern blue tongue should come down to class 1, as its care is no different than the eastern blue tongue, same case with many gecko, dragon and skink species, and many of the small monitors, that are easy and good to keep. The red bellied black snake, little whip snake, curl snake and small eyed snake should come down to a class 2 licence, as they are reasonably easy to care for and are not actually deadly or very dangerous to humans. I'd also like to suggest the Clarence River Turtle (Emydura macquarii binjina) to be added to a class 1 licence, as well as the Three Toed Skink (Saiphos equalis)
