

It is hard for me as a 65yr.old to anticipate what futures my grandchildren are being left to enjoy.I spent my earliest working years nursing and retired after developing Chronic Fatigue.(mostly from absorbing toxic chemicals in my work with dialysis) I did not give up,but studied bush regeneration and learned about the huge threat our environment faces with Global Warming and land clearing.How can Tony Abbott talk about growing thousands of trees while at the same time declaring that tree thinning is a good idea?

Our future economy needs to be around tourism and at the moment it looks as if mining is all that matters and opening up areas that were previously protected.China appears to understand the dangers far better than our politicians and they will force us to change.Trouble with that scenario is that Australia will not be a competitive player in the global race to control emissions .Please bring common sense back into this government thinking,both States AND Federal

Thank you. [REDACTED]